July 2021 Luncheon Webinar

Privacy Matters! Data Privacy by Design and Default

July 20 @ 12:00 PM - 1:00 PM Central

As data becomes more important and ubiquitous, privacy issues are coming to the forefront. News of data breaches and dark data practices (e.g. Cambridge Analytica) is an almost daily occurrence as data is collected and aggregated in commercial markets through a variety of user-inputs, device telemetry, sensor driven collection and other technologies – without necessary and appropriate data privacy and security controls.

This dynamic and increasingly critical complex of data-related issues compels the continual development and deployment of security and privacy requirements, standards and activities for governments and private sector organizations.

Privacy by Design involves identifying privacy risks and goals and engineering those goals, requirements, technologies and techniques into processes and solutions that protect privacy throughout the data lifecycle.

Privacy by Default is a fundamental individual and organizational orientation towards data, understanding of the basic regarding data use regulations and professional standards, and incorporation of data respectful practices into organizational culture and operations.

Join Robyn Mace who will present an overview of the evolution of privacy, emerging legislation and challenges, basic principles of privacy by design and default and basic resources on privacy, including a personal privacy hygiene checklist.

August 2021 Luncheon Webinar - Product Management Essentials for Project Professionals

August 17 @ 12:00 PM - 1:00 PM Central

Need and value are becoming critically important in delivering successful outcomes to stakeholders for Project Managers. Helping the stakeholder understand value above want and need is even more critical. So where does a Project Manager go to build these skills. The understanding of value in terms of a customer, whether internal or external, is the core art and science around Product Management. Building a strong foundational skill in Product Management is a critical success factor for the future of Project Management in a highly volatile, rapidly changing environment.

Project Managers work in most cases on internal projects and services, so there is confusion around using Product Management techniques. The reality is internal customers are just as critical as external. There must be value for both types of customer to engage, for external the engagement is usually money and some time. With internal it is all about time and productivity and, time can have more value than money in certain circumstances. As for a service, everything whether a tangible product or a service must create value for the user (aka customer), so the same dynamics drive their lifecycle and value strategy. At the center is the customer whether dealing with internal or external customers and whether dealing with services or products.

David Mantica, VP & General Manager, Software Education USA LLC, has 25 years of business-to-business services, consulting, coaching, and training industry experience in roles from operations, service delivery, marketing, product management and executive management.

Call for Speakers - PMI Luncheon Webinars

Have you worked on an interesting projects that you'd like to share your experience with your fellow project managers? Do you have a strategy, skill, or technique that you feel would be beneficial to your PMI colleagues? Are you comfortable with presenting in an online environment?

Our volunteer speakers make an impactful contribution to our community. If you would be interested in doing a presentation for one of our webinars, please email programs@pminashville.org and our Programs team will get in contact with you. This is a great way to give back, enhance your resume, and earn volunteer PDUs - while helping others to earn their PDUs.

Our luncheon webinars run from Noon to 1 PM on the third Tuesday of each month. This hour includes announcements, introduction, and Q & A. Therefore, the body of the presentation would normally run around 40-45 minutes.
