PMI Nashville January 2022 Luncheon Webinar - Public Speaking & Storytelling for Project Managers

January 25, Tuesday 12:00 PM - 1:00 PM

Project Managers need to be good speakers. Since communication is such an important part of project management, having good speaking ability projects a professional image. As project managers, we often speak to groups of all sizes in person, and virtually. This session will help you consider how you can sharpen your skills and how doing so will enhance your career.

Consider:

- Professional and technical expertise can open a vast number of doors—in early career
- Expertise in public speaking and storytelling can open more elusive doors—right away, and in late career
- An unseen (and significant) career danger for rising project managers is one of mid-career stagnation.
- Acquiring non-technical expertise becomes increasingly essential. Becoming an expert public speaker and storyteller is an excellent option.

Rashid N. Kapadia, DTM, PMP, is a speaker, project manager, engineer, consultant, and author of "Necessary Bridges: Public Speaking & Storytelling for Project Managers & Engineers." Today he is a crusader for "Eloquence," "Public Speaking, & Storytelling," "FLOW," and for "Regular & Disciplined Reading." Rashid is a lifelong student and an avid reader—committed to reading a minimum of 50 non-fiction books every year. He is constantly on the lookout for new knowledge that can be converted into speeches to solve problems, and to uplift professionals and professions. He has earned multiple degrees and certifications. He has worked in the merchant marine, maritime and offshore industries as an engineer, manager, project manager, and in business development. In 2015 he published his book.
